Perhaps the most difficult part of providing high-quality content for your website is designing the code to present your content to an Internet audience of many different shapes and sizes. Did you know that 46% of Internet users visit a website every week? That number could drop to 20% within the year, according to comScore. If you're managing content for your website, time is of the essence. You need a means of presenting your website to the people that matter most: the audience. Content management systems (CMS) are a mechanism by which you can present different types of content on the same site. Today's web content includes a wide variety of media types including text, video, audio and other types of multimedia content. Without a suitable CMS in place, your website can be hard to update and maintain. Beyond this, your visitors and search engines can only access one type of content at a time. Our Methodology Our goal was to create a collection of web content management systems that had superior features. While we were focusing on features, of course, we wanted to minimize the learning curve and ease of implementation. We set out to research the different types of software available to build a CMS, then put together a list of requirements, using the results of that research, that each CMS had to meet. We then worked with each designer to create a working CMS that fits the guidelines we laid out. The final result is an online directory of the many different CMSs available to fit your content management needs, making it easier for you to find the software that's right for you. Because we recognize that every business is unique, we provided tutorials on how to choose a CMS and help in choosing the best one for your needs. As you can see, all our content management systems fulfill the same criteria of speed and ease of installation, support a large number of media types, make content easy to update and maintain and are user-friendly. Once you select the CMS you need, you're all set up to get started. Our goal is to make your job of creating high-quality content easier. Which is why we're excited to present you with Content Management Systems! It seems that every website has a blog now. New blogs are appearing every day and for free. It's easier than ever to get a website. Sure, you can do it yourself but this is a little time consuming and fraught with unnecessary 09e8f5149f
